

Alysia Dempsey

Wintergreen Women Writers Collective has the opportunity to inspire the next generation of young writers and creatives. It has cultivated an enduring model of a loving community where writers and creatives, both new and seasoned, come together and encourage each other to discover their unique voice to write and create stories that remind us of our history and help guide us toward the future.

During the global pandemic I created a virtual space for the collective to gather like most of the world. I was able to witness the beautiful warmth and support within the sisterhood. I bring my gifts and talents as a self-published author, global citizen and social entrepreneur to create a digital platform that will inspire communities around the world. Being a part of the Wintergreen Women Writers Collective has helped me to discover my own voice and share stories that will inspire others to dream and become who they are truly destined to be.